Other studies indicate that an increase in one's income has a greater impact on happiness below a certain level. Research by Princeton University economist Angus Deaton indicates that in the U.S., $75k is a meaningful benchmark when it comes to money and happiness. Below that level, more money translates to a lot more happiness.

Money and Happiness: The Surprising Research

happiness is related to feeling right across distinct emotions or whether happiness is related to experiencing certain right emotions more than others. We assessed relations of the absolute discrepancies between experienced and desired emotions with greater well-being and depressive symptoms in eight countries around the globe.

The Secret to Happiness

Studies show that money increases happiness when it takes people from a place where there are real threats—poverty—to a place that is reliably safe. After that, money doesn't matter much. Research by the Nobel laureate psychologist and economist Daniel Kahneman showed that money increases happiness until about $75,000 annually, and after that our emotional well-being doesn't increase with income.

In fact, your definition of happiness is likely a combination of satisfaction, cheeriness, merriment, and jollity. But the way you personally define happiness will likely change from day to day as well. And that's one of the most critical aspects of happiness. That's also why it's supposedly so hard to measure and quantify.
